Foreword

I have to confess that before becoming Chairman of its Advisory Committee, I knew of the existence of the Government Art Collection (GAC) but had no proper idea of its sheer size, richness and unique role in promoting Britain's art, history and culture.

Our offices are a world away from the formality of Whitehall, tucked down a tiny side road off one of London's busiest shopping streets. Here Ambassadors, Ministers and senior civil servants come to select the works for display in their offices, under the eagle eye and expert guidance of our Director, Penny Johnson, and her team. We're proud of the fact that at any one time some 80% of the Collection is out on display.

For the general public though, the opportunities for seeing works from the Collection usually occur if they happen to visit a Government building, spot one of our works on loan to a temporary exhibition, visit our website, or take a guided tour of our premises as part of London's Open House.

But our profile is about to change. The new Home Office building, taking shape now on Marsham Street in Westminster, will have art, literally, integrated into its fabric. This project, co-curated with Liam Gillick, and involving six artists, is the first time that the Government Art Collection has commissioned works of art for the exterior of a building on such a scale in Britain. A true example of public art, which will certainly make many more people aware of our existence and the work we do.

Julia Somerville
Chairman
Advisory Committee on the Government Art Collection

Introductory Report

The year 2003-2004 has been characterised by the number of different projects the Government Art Collection (GAC) has been involved with, in Government buildings in the UK and in several locations around the world. We were very pleased to welcome Julia Somerville as the new Chairman of the Advisory Committee on the Government Art Collection, following the departure of Sir John Tusa, who so admirably filled this position for ten years (see GAC Annual Report 2002-03).

One of our most controversial paintings as far as subject matter is concerned, High Treason, Court of Criminal Appeal: the Trial of Sir Roger Casement, 1916 by Sir John Lavery, returned temporarily to London for conservation treatment in May 2003, from the King's Inns in Dublin, where it had been on long term loan. This provided an opportunity for the painting to be displayed for the first time in the UK, at the National Portrait Gallery from July to late September. The dramatic scene depicts the appeal of Roger Casement, the Irish folk hero who was hanged in 1916 for his involvement in the Irish nationalist cause. He is seen in the witness box at the centre of the composition, looking straight out towards the Jury box. Lavery was commissioned to record the historic trial by the presiding judge, Sir Charles John Darling, whose portrait the artist had previously painted.

Our largest and most challenging current project, which began in the summer of 2002, is the commissioning of art for the new Home Office building in Marsham Street, Westminster, designed by Terry Farrell and Partners and built under a PFI arrangement. We are advising the Home Office on the art for this landmark Government building, due to be completed in the spring of 2005: this is the first time that we have been involved in commissioning artists for a Government location in London. On our recommendation, the artist Liam Gillick, has collaborated since 2002, with the architects on the integration of works of art on the façade of the building. Gillick's contribution is now clearly visible in the glass canopy, (originally conceived by the architects as concrete), over the central block which relates in colour and shape to his sculpture platforms. Another feature devised by the artist is text embedded on the glass façade, which can be seen as the building is being constructed. Three further elements by Gillick (vitrines, an entrance icon and sculptures) will be added at certain points during the building schedule.

We have also been involved with the 'Public Arts Strategy', the commissioning of artists for the areas surrounding the building, which has been devised with Liam Gillick as Curator. Six artists were invited to make proposals for work. They are Roger Hiorns, Georgie Hopton, Emma Kay, Runa Islam, Gary Webb and Simon Periton. In developing the individual proposals, we have worked closely with Liam Gillick, the artists, architects, landscape architects, contractors and the Home Office. We are currently researching manufacturers of materials for each of the proposals, confirming technical requirements, and planning the installation to meet the building programme.

A third strand of the project is commissioning artists to make work for the Entrance area and Atrium of the interior of the central block. This aspect of the project is at an early stage, with proposals yet to be agreed by the Home Office.

The Ministerial re-shuffle in summer 2003 required us to swiftly change displays of art in the new incumbents' offices. Estelle Morris, the Minister for the Arts, has a selection of work by Barbara Hepworth; a series of portraits on engraved glass, The Management Committee of the World Wide Web Consortium (2000) by Nick Crowe, a Manchester-based artist; and the painting, Lancashire Fair: Good Friday, Daisy Nook (1946) by L.S. Lowry. Other changes included new displays in the offices of Lord Rooker, Lord Falconer, Kim Howells, Ian McCartney, Douglas Alexander and the late Lord Williams of Mostyn.

Acquisitions are made each year with the advice and approval of the Advisory Committee on the GAC. Original and multiple works of art are acquired to ensure that there are sufficient relevant works for the range of spaces in which we place art. These range from the historic interiors of 10 Downing Street and Ambassadors' Residences, to the entrance halls of Government buildings and the offices of Ministers and senior civil servants. Works of art are acquired from galleries, auctions, print publishers, art fairs, individuals and directly from artists. This year we purchased three historical paintings at auction, including the charming Portrait of the Broke and the Bowes Families (1740) by Thomas Bardwell (1704-1767), the first 'conservation piece' to enter the Collection. One of the distinctive elements of the composition is a visual pun: an empty frame is depicted on the wall in the centre of the room, suggesting the resting place for the newly painted picture, which exactly matches the original 'Kentian' frame of the painting.

Contemporary acquisitions included two large striking monochromatic views of London by John Virtue, Landscape No 622 and Landscape No 664 (2003). He developed these paintings in his studio at the National Gallery, where he is Associate Artist, working from ink and pen sketches made from the top of Somerset House looking towards St Paul's. Zarina Bhimji's Howling like dogs, I swallowed solid air, a lightbox piece made between 1998 and 2003, which shows the disused interior of her father's factory in Uganda, with ceiling fans lying like sculptures on the floor, was also acquired. A number of photographs were added to the Collection, including South Downs (2002) by Richard Billingham, and The Meal (2003) by A. K Dolven, an intriguing image of a carefully composed group of people eating in a dining room that is infused with white light.

We regularly work on displays for the interiors of 10 Downing Street. For the fourth year running we arranged the annual loan and display of a selection of art from a regional gallery, Leeds City Art Gallery, from October 2003. These loaned works of art were not required for display by the gallery during this time. The group of works form an impressive display in the ground floor Lobby and Corridor. They include three beautifully textured paintings by Stanley Spencer; a subtle, yet richly painted still life by William Nicholson; and the drawing, The Poet Reading to his Children (1948) by Barbara Hepworth. Sculpture, which is a strong element of the Leeds Collection, is represented by the jaunty work, The Cricketer (circa 1989) by Barry Flanagan that was placed at the entrance of the Corridor leading to the Cabinet Room. Changes to the display in Downing Street are often made when works of art are requested for temporary public exhibitions, providing us with an opportunity to replace them with new works. This year Edward Wadsworth's painting, Floats and Afloat (1928), newly returned from the Ambassador's Residence in Washington, complemented a display of British Surrealist paintings in Downing Street. Nourishment (2002), a set of prints by Michael Landy, was installed on the first floor, and displays of contemporary photography continued to be shown in the Ante Room.

A significant proportion of our work is with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. With a change of Ambassador in Washington in August, we took the opportunity to introduce several new displays, which relate to the building or reflect historical and cultural connections between the UK and the USA. These include three large paintings by John Piper of English Georgian architecture that complement the neo-Georgian architecture of the Lutyens-designed Residence; paintings from the 1960s and 1970s that illustrate the influence of American Abstract Expressionism on British art; and the brightly coloured iconic screen print of Queen Elizabeth II of the United Kingdom from the portfolio, Reigning Queens (1985), by Andy Warhol, the first time this work has been displayed in a British Government building in the USA. We also reviewed and installed new works of art in the British Ambassador's Residence and Embassy in Beijing. Like the Washington project, the cultural connections between the UK and the host country were emphasised wherever possible: a revealing series of prints from An Authentic Account of an Embassy from the King of Great Britain to the Emperor of China (printed in 1797), after William Alexander, is displayed alongside Martin Archer Shee's portrait of Sir George Thomas Staunton. Aged eleven, Staunton accompanied his father, the Secretary to Lord Macartney (who led the Ambassadorial visit to China from 1792-4), and later was renowned for his authoritative knowledge of China. The circus is one of the themes in the Drawing Room, with works by Laura Knight and Duncan Grant, and a lively and colourful painting on glass of a tightrope walker by Cosmo Clark. Two works in the Entrance Hall of the Embassy make allusions to China: Simon Patterson's playful The Great Bear (1992), is a subverted London underground map which includes, among others, a tube line of Sinologists; and the diptych, Frozen Sky (1997) by Langlands and Bell which depicts a circle of three-letter codes used to identify international airports, including 'BJS' for Beijing and 'SHA' for Shanghai. New displays were also selected for the Residences in Buenos Aires (after a full refurbishment of the house), Strasbourg and the United Nations in New York. Works of art were despatched to San Francisco, Baku, Brussels and St. Petersburg, while others returned from Bucharest, Budapest and Brasilia. GAC staff visited Vienna, Warsaw and Athens to review displays in preparation for future projects, and in Lisbon, installed works of art at the temporary Ambassador's Residence. Six drawings by William Simpson depicting various episodes from the Crimean War were destroyed in the bombing of the Consul General's temporary office in the grounds of the Residence and Offices (Pera House) in Istanbul in November.

During the year, as usual, hundreds of works of art were received and despatched by a dedicated team in the GAC workshop. Among the major paintings which have been conserved this year, are the early and uncharacteristic, Welsh Landscape (c.1939-40), by Lucian Freud (from the Residence of the Ambassador to the United Nations in New York); the Portrait of Queen Victoria by Sir George Hayter (from the Ambassador's Residence in Washington); and the slightly later Portrait of Queen Victoria by Franz Xaver Winterhalter (from the Ambassador's Residence, Paris). We have continued with our programme of re-framing and re-mounting works of art. With the appointment of a Technical Operations Manager, we have also re-arranged the layout of the workshop.

Research and interpretation is an essential part of our curatorial work, and our new displays were accompanied by information written by specialist GAC staff. Extensive research was conducted into a number of important works in the Collection including: High Treason, Court of Criminal Appeal: the Trial of Sir Roger Casement, 1916 by Sir John Lavery; Deptford Dockyard: 'Les Trois Amis' (1763), by John Cleveley the Elder; and two paintings by James Digman Wingfield depicting The Picture Gallery, Stafford House (1848) in preparation for their installation at Lancaster House, the Centre for Government Hospitality.

As our premises are not open to the public on a regular basis, we are always pleased to participate in the annual London Open House weekend in September. This year some 270 members of the public visited the GAC on pre-booked guided tours led by our staff. Demand from various art associations for a slot in our fortnightly programme of evening tours of our premises continues to increase, with bookings well into next year.

Access to Government buildings is of necessity restricted. We therefore look very favourably on requests to lend works of art to temporary public exhibitions. The following are a few of the works of art that we have lent to exhibitions this year to increase public access to, and knowledge of, the Collection. Event on the Downs (1934) by Paul Nash to Paul Nash: Modern Artists, Ancient Landscape at Tate, Liverpool; The Integrity of Belgium (1914) by W. R. Sickert and the sculpture by A.G. Walker, Florence Nightingale (1820-1910), Reformer of Hospital Nursing, to The Edwardians: Secrets and Desires at the National Gallery of Australia, Canberra and Art Gallery of South Australia, Adelaide; and several paintings to the exhibition, The Happy Couple at Cartwright Hall, Bradford.

Last July we initiated and hosted the first meeting of world-wide government art collections, which provided an excellent opportunity for us to explore common practices, issues and to exchange ideas. We have now established a more formal network and will continue to work together for mutual benefit. Representatives attended from the USA (Art in Embassies Programme and the national Loan Service, both based in Washington), Australia (Artbank), the Netherlands (Foreign Real Estate Department), Ireland (Art Management Office, the office of Public Works), Northern Ireland (Northern Ireland Civil Service Art Collection) and Canada (Department of Foreign Affairs and international Trade). One of the striking differences is that the GAC is the only collection spanning the sixteenth century through to the present day.

All GAC staff have been involved in most projects in one way or another. During this year there have been some changes to the team. We have had to say goodbye to three valued members of the staff: Lidia Plintshev, who returned to her former department, the Government Office for London; Emma Roodhouse, who moved to Glasgow; and Dr Mary Beal, who retired. A very talented researcher, Mary had been a member of the GAC team for over 25 years, during which she contributed considerably to the development of the Collection through her expertise, professional judgement and knowledge of conservation and art. Her published material included the book, British Embassy, Paris: The House and its Works of Art (co-written in 1992 with John Cornforth), and similar publications that accompanied the Residences in Bonn and Tel Aviv. Her considerable published research on the painting, Event on the Downs (1934) by Paul Nash, also offered a new and refreshing interpretation of this work. We were pleased to welcome new colleagues: Kate Conroy as the Director's Assistant and Administrator; Chantal Condron as Curator: Research and Information; Charlotte Baber as Assistant Registrar; Andrew Parratt as Technical Operations Manager; Tung Tsin Lam as New Media Officer; and Alison Fuller as Assistant Curator: Research and Information. I would like to thank everyone at the GAC for all that they have achieved in another busy and demanding year.

Once more we have benefited greatly from the judgement, expertise and support of the members of the Advisory Committee, chaired by Julia Somerville since September 2003. In addition to the new Chairman, we have taken on two new independent members, Dr Penelope Curtis, Curator of the Henry Moore Institute, and Sarah Shalgosky, Curator of the Mead Gallery, University of Warwick. As ever, we are indebted to all the members for their generosity in their time and commitment to the GAC.

Government Art Collection Programme Vote

The GAC has an annual programme vote of £551,000, £200,000 of which is reserved for acquisitions. The remaining £351,000 is largely for conservation, framing, transport, photography, publications, workshop equipment and some acquisitions. In 2003-4 a total of £220,000 was spent on acquisitions of works of art.
